Overview

Murray is an Architect with over 40 years of technical expertise in architecture, dispute resolution, and the forensic investigation of building defects and their remediation.

He has worked for Sense Studio since its inception.

Focusing on new build and large-scale remediation of social housing in his early career, he later set up a multi-disciplinary practice with a number of associates.

As Architectural Director, Murray managed numerous projects focusing on forensic diagnosis and remediation of building defects, employing a variety of procurement methods. Later in his career Murray joined a firm of architectural experts.

Education

Portsmouth School of Architecture 1963–1970 - Diploma in Architecture at distinction level

Fully qualified RIBA Parts 1, 2 and 3

RIBA thesis prize in Building Technology class

Experience

Murray has acted as an independent expert in a large number of actions involving build quality, the role and responsibilities of architects and the remediation of defects in buildings.

His early career was shaped by his experience working for the Greater London Council and the National Building Agency, where he worked as an architect for large-scale housing developments and as an author of a number of publications.

As an Associate and later Director of a multi-disciplinary practice for a large part of his career, Murray led numerous architectural design and forensic diagnosis and remediation projects for a large portfolio of building projects. In collaboration with Liverpool John Moore's

University he authored two books on adapting buildings for disabled people.

He then went on to work for a firm of expert architects advising clients on the investigation of building defects and their remediation, writing expert reports in support of litigation, the completeness of design and construction information and the role and responsibilities of architects and the building team.
